

In the framework of the University of Zurich's initiative for refugees, the International Relations Office hosts a presentation about Scholars at Risk, an international network to defend the principles of academic freedom and human rights of scholars around the world.

“Ayse Dayi lost her job as an Assistant Professor and Acting Chair of Psychology in Istanbul 29 Mayis University on January 14th, 2016, due to signing the petition ‘We will not be a party to this crime – Em ê nebin hevparên vî sûcî!’, a petition by Academics for Peace that asked the Turkish government to stop the military operations and human rights violations in the Southeast of Turkey. She has come to the University of Lausanne as a Scholar at Risk for a two year research position.

In this talk, she will give an overview of the academic repression in Turkey that started with the dismissals of signatories (312 people) and extended to other academics (7316 people) through decrees issued under the State of Emergency after the failed coup. Using her personal experience, Ms. Dayi will discuss the ongoing work of Academics for Peace, the Scholars at Risk network and possible ways of expanding international support to scholars in Turkey, in Switzerland, Europe and beyond.”

All interested persons are kindly invited.
Registration is not required.

Picture frontpage: ©Zeynep Ozatalay. The picture was designed for the “BirGün” newspaper's supplement on academia and was inspired by one of the dismissed professors who told her students that the professors are the trees and the students are the fruit that will continue the work even when the professors are gone.

Welcome Address

Prof. Dr. Gabriele Siegert
Vice-President for Arts and Social Sciences
University of Zurich

Speaker

Dr. Ayse Dayi
Scholar at Risk, currently a researcher at the Faculty of Social and Political Sciences
University of Lausanne

Commentator

Prof. Dr. Martina Caroni
Vice Rector and Professor of International Constitutional, and Comparative Law
University of Lucerne
Delegate for Human Rights of the Swiss Academies of Arts and Science and member of the Federal Commission on Migration

Organizer

International Relations Office
University of Zurich
www.int.uzh.ch/de/in/refugees.html